Geological field school in France

Welcome to UniLaSalle, a leading “Grande École” in Geosciences and Agriculture

ELIGIBILITY

- Third year undergraduate students & senior geology majors

GPA: 2.7 (B)

FRENCH: not required but basic French would be useful

- Limited number of participants
- Students will earn 6 US credits

PROGRAM DATES

Start 15 May 2017

Arrival day on May 15 and beginning of classes on May 16

Application deadline:

15 February 2017

OBJECTIVES

The department of geology at UniLaSalle offers a unique opportunity for field work in geology in FRANCE. International and French students will have the opportunity to work alongside faculty members, graduate students (peer teaching) and invited specialists. They will experience hands-on geological exploration in small groups.

Extend learning from the classroom to the field in sequence stratigraphy and with a transect of the Alps. The field school will also introduce the participants to cross-cultural management, geological mapping and petrography.

Study in France

The « Grandes Ecoles » are unique to France, they were created in the late 18th century in order to offer outstanding scientific education to the country's future engineers. UniLaSalle, founded in 1854, belongs to this tradition by promoting the development of personalities, revealing and developing the talents and abilities. The "Grandes Ecoles" select students for admission based chiefly on national ranking in competitive written and oral exams. In 2013, more than 150 students are enrolled in the Geology Master level programme which courses cover four main sectors: energy resources (petroleum geosciences), mineral resources (mines and quarries), geological engineering (geotechnics and natural risks), water, land and environment (hydrogeology and industrial risks). UniLaSalle encourages the maintenance of a direct link between student associations and international scientific and professional associations (3 student chapters: AAPG petroleum geologists, SEG economic geologists, SEG exploration geophysicists) on top of multiple student organizations present on campus (UNIRAID, Geotech UniLaSalle, etc).
